Celebrating 40 years of rural theatre

Rachael Griffin, Managing Director
About Us

Our vision is to be the nation’s rural theatre company.

Our mission is to develop and produce quality new theatre about the contemporary rural world. To tour the country with plays that have local impact and national resonance. To turn up in peoples’ village halls, theatres and digital backyards, connecting audiences nationwide.

Why Archive?
Who Cares?
The Project had 3 key strands:

- Sourcing new material
- Archiving and cataloguing the collection
- Volunteering

We worked in partnership with Shropshire Council’s Archive Service and Senior Archivist Sal Mager, as well as Pentabus and Shropshire Council archive volunteers.

Senior Archivist Sal stated of her time with us:

“It’s been a delight working with Pentabus to help bring this fascinating collection to life.

The project will, I hope, not only ensure the long-term preservation of this unique record spanning 40 years of Pentabus, but also help to generate interest in its potential to throw new light on the development of the performing arts in this period.”
Volunteers
Volunteer Mike has said of his time with the project:

‘it’s been fascinating and fun to see the past 40 years come to life, and frustrating to encounter the gaps. It’s gratifying when some of those gaps are filled, definitely not ‘shooting the past’ - hopefully a net with more threads than holes! I feel very privileged to have been involved.'

Tour Dates

Pentabys Theatre Company’s ground-breaking production In This Place enjoyed a sell-out success in September 2013.

Written by Lydia Adetunji and Frances Brett, walkers and theatre-goers from across the county and beyond donned boots, audio headsets (and anoraks) and headed off from The Bog Centre near the Shropstone, to enjoy a walking adventure with stunning Shropshire views. The audio theatre adventure was experienced by over 500 audience members and ran at 97% capacity. Over 25% of audiences were new not to Pentabys but to theatre-going in general.

Audience member Fiona Cornwell from Shropshire Wildlife Trust (and one of the original contributors for the interviews that inspired the show) described In This Place as “beautiful, evocative, haunting and wistful – and it’s so great to see such an impressive range of ages and ethnicities in the audience.”

A walking adventure in the Shropshire Hills

This project from acclaimed Pentabys Theatre offered a thrilling new way to explore the Shropshire Hills. Experienced through headphones whilst following a circular walk from the Bog Visitor Centre, the new play immersed audiences into a world of stories and events connected to the landscape, a compelling and inspiring experience about what shapes our relationship to where we are.

As walkers moved through landscapes ranging from open fields with vast skies, dappled woodland and stone outcrops coloured with purple heather and wildberries, they experienced the call of the curlew, the tinkle of tea cups and the clatter of horses’ hooves as a soundscape backdrop to the narrative. The stories were brought to life by a cast of 12 professional actors (with Oliver and Carlton Hobbs winners amongst them).
